About page - Amidst the panic, a secret society of scientists known as the Undead League emerged. Made up of virologists, epidemiologists, and survival experts, this group was formed from the remnants of various institutions. They recognized that traditional methods of response were ineffective and decided to take matters into their own hands. Operating from hidden bunkers scattered across remote locations, they worked tirelessly to study the virus and develop a strategy for survival.

Memorial - In Memoriam: Commander Elias "Grim" Lawson

Leader of the Undead League

Fallen on October 31st, 2024

Today, we lay to rest a warrior, a leader, and a friend—Commander Elias "Grim" Lawson, the heart and soul of the Undead League. His name, now etched into the history of our survival, will forever resonate as a symbol of strength, wisdom, and unwavering resolve in the face of unimaginable horror.

When the world fell apart, and the dead walked among us, it was Grim who stepped forward to lead. He didn't seek power or glory. Instead, he saw a group of survivors, lost and afraid, and chose to stand as their shield. His mission was clear: not only to survive, but to thrive, to protect those who could not protect themselves, and to create a home in a world of ruin.

As a leader, Grim was unparalleled. With the strategic brilliance of a general and the compassion of a guardian, he united a ragtag group of strangers into a family. The Undead League, forged under his vision, became more than just a band of survivors. We were a team, bound by common purpose, surviving not just for ourselves, but for each other. His tactical genius and ability to adapt to the ever-shifting dangers of the apocalypse kept us one step ahead of the undead, time and again.

Grim was known for his calm in the chaos—when others faltered, he stood firm. Through countless battles, skirmishes, and raids, he faced death without fear, a silent promise in his eyes that none of us would fall alone. His decisions were never rash, his sacrifices never questioned. He led by example, with the rare combination of humility and power that inspired loyalty, trust, and love.

But beyond his tactical mind and survival instincts, it was Grim's humanity that we will remember most. He had an uncanny ability to find light in the darkest of times. He made us laugh when we thought we had no more joy left to give. He took the time to listen when the weight of the world seemed unbearable. And, most importantly, he never lost sight of what mattered: protecting the people he loved.

When the end came—when the final battle took him from us—he didn't fall with regret. He fell with purpose. Grim knew what was at stake, and he gave his life to ensure that the League would live on. He fought not for a future of endless days, but for the hope that others could rebuild what we lost. That hope, his legacy, will live on in each of us.

Commander Elias "Grim" Lawson may no longer walk among us, but his spirit is woven into the fabric of the Undead League. He lives on in the lessons he taught us, the lives he saved, and the undying courage that we will carry forward in his name. We are not defeated, for as long as we stand, we honor him.

Rest in peace, Grim. The world may be lost, but your light will never fade. You will always be our commander, our protector, our hero. The Undead League marches on, because of you. Always.

In your memory, we continue the fight.
